This headline style daily writer's journal is made with comfort zones in mind... specifically getting out of them. Sometimes you will love it and sometimes you will hate it, but there is no shortage of opportunities to get you out of your own genre and into something you may be far less comfortable with. Even a mere one hundred words on a focus that you hate will help to advance your skills. If you aren't writing in multiple genres at least on occasion you are doing yourself a disservice. Never forget that art is subjective. There are no wrong answers, just different perceptions. Great for beginners and seasoned authors alike, a daily micro story can help you hone your craft, encourage you to think outside of your box, and give you insight on your approach to styles both inside and outside of your own without leaving a large footprint on your time. This publication strives to be unique yet broad in the subject matter of the prompts while offering some familiarity as well to an array of different kinds of writers.
