Nothing Abides: To Sing Like a Stone in the River Ray Sharp

Nothing Abides, To Sing Like a Stone in the River, by Ray Sharp, is a poetic journey downstream through rapids, eddies and quiet pools. The 16 poems are set in desert canyons, the Texas Hill Country, the northwoods of Wisconsin and Michigan, the vast fields of sunflowers in the Missouri River Valley, and at the Lake Superior shore. Sharp's poems travel "...into the cold-fog morning/where the route is uncertain" and yet, while flowing water can represent impermanence, the poems arrive at zen-like calm and transcendence: "Let the sun warm the cold stone/that is your heart, that it might/sing like a cobble in the rushing stream." Above all, these poems are keenly observed, or as Sharp says, "I sank to my nose and gazed/along the water's opaque surface/contemplating the possibilities."
