Allie is excited to be in sixth grade, the highest grade in the school. She is confident when she is helping children cross the street as a crossing guard, doing gymnastics in the school field, or arm wrestling the boys at recess. However, her confidence wavers around Patty, a popular 6th grader, whose cute pink designer sweatshirt and deep blue designer jeans make Allie's new clothes from the value store look cheap, dull, and starchy. Things get worse as she starts to deal with her wide short feet. Buying shoes like her friends' is not an option. Allie can only get shoes from the special shoe store for hard-to-fit feet. Her struggle causes her to wonder why God would give her such wide short feet. She fears that she will have to wear "kiddie" shoes with no heels to the spring dance. Allie soon discovers the difference between bad friends and good friends and begins to believe that she is truly very special.
